The Presidential Campaign of 1860

A great many people have inquired if Abraham Lincoln, a man of modest means, could be elected to the Presidency today. The answer to such inquiries is, of course, a matter of conjecture. Except for students of United States history, few people are cognizant of the traditional methods of conducting presidential campaigns in the 1860s. Lincoln adhered to the precedent set by George Washington that no presidential candidate should actively participate in his own campaign.

In fact, some biographers have stated that Lincoln made no campaign addresses, wrote no public letters and held no political conferences. Nicolay and Hay, in their Abraham Lincoln — A History, wrote that "beyond a few casual interviews . . . , the great presidential canvas went on with scarcely a private suggestion or touch of actual direction from the Republican candidate."

Modern historians do not always agree with Lincoln's private secretaries regarding Lincoln's so-called inactivity during the period from May 18 to November 6, 1860. A study of Lincoln's correspondence compiled in The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln, Volume IV, pages

50-136, and a survey of his activities in Lincoln Day By Day — A Chronology, Volume II, pages 280-296, reveal that the "Railsplitter" was no rocking chair candidate. Instead, he had a firm grip on the reins of the Republican Party machine.

The nearest approach to a campaign speech was Lincoln's remarks at a Republican rally, held at Springfield, Illinois on August 8, 1860. The rally was a mammoth occasion at the Fair Grounds and was attended by thousands. Lincoln's arrival during the afternoon in a carriage set off a stampede by his friendly supporters who lifted him bodily from the vehicle and carried him to one of the stands. Upon being presented to his tumultuous audience, he made the following remarks:

"My Fellow Citizens:—I appear among you upon this occasion with no intention of making a speech. It has been my purpose, since I have been placed in my present position, to make no speeches. This assemblage having been drawn together at the place of my residence, it appeared to be the wish of those constituting this vast assembly to see me; and it is certainly my wish to see all of you. I appear upon the ground here at this time only for the purpose of affording myself the best opportunity of seeing you, and enabling you to see me.

This print depicts Lincoln with a beard on horseback in front of his Springfield, Illinois, home. As he did not engage in an active public campaign for the presidency he did not make a triumphant return home in October, 1860. It was not until after the election that the President-elect started to grow a beard.

"I confess with gratitude, be it understood, that I did not suppose my appearance among you would create the tumult which I now witness. I am profoundly gratified for this manifestation of your feelings. I am gratified, because it is a tribute such as can be paid to no man as a man. It is the evidence that four years from this time you will give a like manifestation to the next man who is the representative of the truth on the questions that now agitate the public. And it is because you will then fight for this cause as you do now, or with even greater ardor than now, though I be dead and gone. I most profoundly and sincerely thank you.

"Having said this much, allow me now to say that it is my wish that you will hear this public discussion by others of our friends who are present for the purpose of addressing you, and that that you will kindly let me be silent."

After making these brief remarks, Lincoln escaped "by stratagem on horseback with the expectant crowd massed around the carriage."

Lincoln wrote a dozen or more private letters in relation to Republican political strategy, but they were always marked "private" or "confidential." Lincoln had no intention of committing himself publicly on any question, major or minor. His other communications, not pertinent to the issues, were quite extensive. Lincoln maintained a special campaign office on the second floor of the State House, where he received hundreds of letters and newspapers and met politicians, curious observers, portrait painters, newspaper reporters, photographers and personal friends. However, if Lincoln remained quiet his political friends did not. They, along with the campaigners of the other three political parties, were most active.

Abiding by political custom, John Bell of the Constitutional Union Party, and John C. Breckinridge of the National Democratic Party did not participate actively in their own campaigns. However, Stephen A. Douglas, representing the northern wing of the Democratic Party, spurned the Washington tradition and engaged in a "man-killing" speaking tour. The "Little Giant" spoke throughout the North and then pushed courageously into the South which became for him "enemy country." His speaking itinerary was the most extensive ever made by a nominee in the history of the country, until the days of William Jennings Bryan.

Some of Douglas' followers were embarrassed by their nominee's furious activity to be elected President. One explanation was that Douglas was on a lyceum tour en route for a visit with his mother. Unfriendly caricaturists drew United States maps showing the zigzag course followed by Douglas "In Search of His Mother."

The printmakers of 1860, however, were not to be outdone with a noncommittal, non-traveling candidate. They pictured Lincoln anachronistically, with a beard, in a lithograph astride a horse, being greeted by well-wishers before his home at 8th and Jackson Streets, Springfield, Illinois with the caption: ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S RETURN HOME AFTER HIS SUCCESSFUL CAMPAIGN FOR THE PRESIDENCY OF THE UNITED STATES IN OCTOBER, 1860.

Douglas In Vermont*

Editor's Note: Stephen A. Douglas visited Brandon, Vermont, his birthplace, as a Presidential Candidate on July 28th, 1860. He most assuredly was not "in search of his mother" who resided in New York State. Douglas' father died July 1, 1813, when Stephen was an infant. His mother married Gehazi Granger in 1830, and moved to Manchester Center, Ontario County, New York. Mrs. Gehazi Granger died in 1869, surviving Douglas by eight years. There were no family ties in Brandon for the "Little Giant."

An account of Douglas' Brandon visit appeared in the Rutland Herald of August 2, 1860:

"Some forty of our citizens, including the committee of reception from Brandon, accompanied Mr. Douglas to Brandon, where he was received as in Rutland, by the citizens of all parties, amounting in number to some 2000 persons, and greeting extended to him, such as Brandon knows how to bestow. The Brandon House and many private residences were decorated with flags and streamers, and everything wore a holiday appearance. The 'Allen Grays' were out and did escort duty, and the Brandon and Vergennes bands furnished music for the occasion.

"Upon the arrival of the cars at Brandon, a procession was formed, escorted by the Bands and Military, and headed by the carriages containing Mr. Douglas, the committee of reception and the invited guests, and followed by a large number of carriages containing the citizens generally. The procession moved through most of the principal streets until it came to the old homestead, or 'birthplace' of their guest, when it halted, and an opportunity was given for those who chose to view at this time that interesting relic. A large concourse of people had gathered here in advance of the procession, and upon its arrival great enthusiasm was manifested by the crowd. Mr. Douglas, as well as his friends, viewed this relic of his boyhood days with an evident degree of interest. The building stands at the north end of the village, and is a small, brown, story and a half house, with a latticed porch, and bears evidence of the humble life of the former occupants, but there were associations connected with it, which at this time made it a matter of interest far beyond many of more attractive appearance.

"After this halt of the procession it then moved back to the Brandon House, where accommodations had been provided for their guests, and the procession was broken up. A platform had been erected in front of the hotel, which was now occupied by the committee and their guests and a few invited friends.

"Mr. Douglas was welcomed to Brandon and her hospitalities by E. N. Briggs, Esq., and then introduced to her citizens. Mr. Douglas responded in a most touching and affecting reply, and we have to regret that we cannot give it entire to our readers. He acknowledged his gratitude for the attention paid him by the citizens of all parties, and confined his remarks to topics peculiar to, and suggestive of, the occasion. He spoke for about thirty minutes, and was listened to with profound attention, after which the formality of the reception was broken up, and he mingled freely with the citizens. At eight o'clock in the evening Mr. and Mrs. Douglas held a levee in the parlors of the Brandon House, for the purpose of receiving their friends, and a large number of citizens paid their respects to them.

THE BIRTHPLACE MEMORIAL

(The concluding paragraph of President Dwight D. Eisenhower's address at President Abraham Lincoln's birthplace, April 23, 1954, is continued from the November, 1966 issue.)

"Thank you again for the great honor you do me for coming out here. I cannot tell you how happy I am, at least, to have the opportunity of coming to the birthplace of Lincoln, a man who for me — like all of you — has been an idol since the days of my first memories.

"Thank you and goodbye."

VISITORS AT BIRTHPLACE

In July, 1966, some ninety-seven thousand visitors registered at Lincoln's birthplace from all fifty states, the District of Columbia and twenty-six foreign countries.
